Rashi never just comments; something in the text always impels him to do so. Rashi’s comments are answers to unspoken questions and difficulties arising from a thoughtful reading of the Torah. Therefore, anyone who wants a true understanding of Rashi’s classic Torah commentary must always ask

“What’s Bothering Rashi?”

Concerning the Menorah in the Temple, the Torah says “Aharon and his sons shall arrange (ya’aroch) it from evening until morning…. (Exodus 27:21)

Rashi comments on “from evening until morning: “Give it its measure of oil which can burn from evening until morning. The Sages estimated this measure as half a lug for the long nights of Teves (December). The same measure applies for all nights, and it doesn’t matter if oil is left over.”

This comment appears strange. Why does Rashi abandon the simple meaning of the verse, i.e., that the oil should burn from evening until morning? What’s bothering Rashi?

Answer: The Hebrew word ya’aroch means either “arrange” or “estimate.” It would seem to mean “arrange” here, as all translations have it. But this would imply that the arranging should be done all night long, from evening until morning; or any time at night, starting from evening until the morning. But neither of these meanings seems reasonable. So Rashi tells us that here the word ya’aroch here means “estimate” — estimate the measure so there will be enough for it to burn from evening until morning.

I Did Not Know That!

“Like the work of a stone craftsman, written clearly like the engraving on a signet ring, engrave the two stones on the names of the Children of Israel.” (28:11)

A signet ring’s image is engraved backwards so that when it is pressed into wax to seal a document its impression will read forwards. But is it logical that the names of the Tribes would be written backwards on the breastplate? Maharil Diskin explains, therefore, that the names of the Tribes were indeed inscribed backwards — like a signet ring — but on the backs of the precious stones. The names were viewed by looking through the transparent stones. When viewed from the front, the names appeared forwards.

Our 2 sons are out of the house studying in Beis Medrash so we don’t get parsha questions from school anymore. We have a lot of Ba’alei Teshuvas or potential Ba’alei Teshuvas who eat by us on Shabbat, and we do all kinds of things at the Shabbat table, one of which is to do the Parsha questions. And even without guests, we enjoy it: we sometimes try to see it in the Rashi ourselves- we name the pasuk (to save time) and then look in the Rashi ourselves. We enjoy this tremendously and so do our guests.
