10. What does the Torah mean when it refers to a zav who “has not washed his hands” (15:11)?

Rashi never just comments; something in the text always impels him to do so. Rashi’s comments are answers to unspoken questions and difficulties arising from a thoughtful reading of the Torah. Therefore, anyone who wants a true understanding of Rashi’s classic Torah commentary must ask “What’s Bothering Rashi?”

“What’s Bothering Rashi?”

“And the garment which was washed and from which the affliction departed, it shall be washed again and will be pure.” (Vayikra 13:58)

Rashi: “It shall be washed again”: This expression refers to immersion in a mikveh (ritual purification pool).

The word “washed” appears twice in this verse. Why does Rashi insist that the second “washing” refers to immersion in a mikveh? What’s wrong with explaining the second “washing” the same as the first one; simply that the garment is washed? What’s bothering Rashi?

Answer: The verse has already stated that the garment was washed and the affliction has departed. What purpose could there be for a second washing? If laundering is part of the purification process, this has already been achieved by the first washing. Therefore, the second “washing” — if it is to make sense as part of the purification process — must refer to something other than mere laundering. Hence, it must refer to immersion in a mikveh, a ritual purification pool.

I Did Not Know That!

“If he is poor and his means are not sufficient... (14:21)

Regarding other sacrifices, there is a dispute among the Sages whether a rich man who brings a sacrifice prescribed for a poor man has, post-facto, fulfilled his obligation. All agree, however, regarding the sacrifice of a person afflicted with tzara’as as that his obligation has not been fulfilled under such circumstances. The affliction of tzara’as comes as a punishment for miserliness. If a rich person brings the sacrifice that a poor man should bring, it shows that he is not yet cured of his affliction. He is still a miser! Therefore he has not fulfilled his obligation.
