Sherlox Holmes and the Mysterious Fire

World famous detective Sherlox Holmes gave three short puffs on his meerschaum pipe. “You haven’t got a match, have you Dr. Watstein?” he said.

“I’m afraid I do,” said Watstein, peering into the large volume that lay before him. “This text is my match. But I’m no match for it.”

“Read it to me,” said Sherlox.

“The verse says ‘the sons of Aharon the kohen shall put fire (v’nasnu aish) on the altar...’ (Vayikra 1:7). Rashi points out that even though miraculous fire from Heaven kindled the altar, the kohanim were nevertheless commanded to do their part and bring some ‘man-made’ fire too.”

“G-d helps those who help themselves,” said Sherlox.

“True, but why does Rashi need to go into this whole explanation? The verse is as simple as can be: ‘The kohanim should put fire on the altar.’ What ‘sparks’ Rashi to mention fire from Heaven?”

“Dr. Watstein,” said Sherlox, “you haven’t got a match.”

Answer:

“Dr. Watstein, what does one generally do with fire?” asked Sherlox.

“You kindle it, what else?” said Watstein.

“And what does this verse say, literally?”

“It says v’nasnu aish, they put fire! Aha! I see! The word v’nasnu — they put — doesn’t really match the word aish — fire. You don’t put fire, you kindle fire.”

“Exactly,” said Sherlox. “The Torah almost always uses the phrase to kindle a fire, not to put a fire. Like in the verse: The kohen will kindle wood upon it.” (Vayikra 6:5)

“Yes,” said Watstein, “and like the verse: Do not kindle a fire on the Shabbos day. (Shemos 35:3) Therefore, Rashi wants to explain why here it says to put fire. Rashi answers with the midrashic explanation that the kohen did not initiate the kindling of the fire, for it was already alight from Heaven. Rather, he merely put fire, adding his share to the existing blaze.”

“Dr. Watstein, you haven’t got a match!”

I Did Not Know That!

“If the anointed kohen sins…he shall offer a bull as a sin offering…And take the bull outside the camp…and burn it…” (Leviticus 4:3,12)

The Torah commands that the kohen gadol’s sin offering be burned in public, outside the Sanctuary premises, so that no one will be embarrassed to admit his own sin.

“Imagine!” a sinner will think, “Even the kohen gadol sinned; yet he admitted it and brought an atonement offering. Certainly, I too should admit my sin and bring an atonement.”
