Overview

The life of Sara, mother of the Jewish People, comes to a close at the age of one hundred and twenty-seven. After mourning and eulogizing her, Avraham buries her in the Cave of Machpela. As this is the burial place of Adam and Chava, Avraham is prepared to pay its owner Ephron the Hittite the exorbitant sum which he demands for the cave. Avraham places the responsibility for finding a suitable wife for his son Yitzchak on his faithful servant Eliezer, who takes an oath to choose a wife from amongst Avraham’s family and not from the Canaanites. Eliezer travels to Aram Naharaim, to the city of Nachor, and prays to Hashem to show him a sign so he will know whom to choose. At evening time, as he is about to water his camels, Rivka providentially appears and Eliezer asks her for a drink of water. Not only does she give him to drink, but she draws water for all ten of his thirsty camels. (Some 140 gallons!) This extreme thoughtfulness and kindness is the sign that she is the right wife for Yitzchak, and a suitable mother of the Jewish People. Negotiations with Rivka’s father and her brother Lavan finally result in her leaving with Eliezer. Yitzchak brings Rivka into the tent of his mother Sara, marries her and loves her. He is then consoled for the loss of his mother. Avraham remarries Hagar who is renamed Ketura to indicate her improved ways. Six children are born to them. After giving them gifts, Avraham sends them to the East. Avraham passes away at the age of one hundred and seventy-five and is buried next to Sara in the Cave of Machpela.

Youth and the Young

“YOUTH AND THE YOUNG

“Sara’s lifetime was one hundred years, twenty years, and seven years” runs the old adage. When a person is young they are blessed with alacrity of mind and body, but they are also beset by the insecurities of youth and its immaturity. When a person grows older, experience brings a perspective to life which can lead to wisdom. However, the strength of our physical frame is not what it was in our youth.

Sara, however, was blessed with total emotional and spiritual maturity as a girl, and even as an old woman she retained her physical strength and agility of mind.

“Sara’s lifetime was one hundred years, twenty years, and seven years.” The verse seems to use the word “years” in a redundant fashion. More economically, the Torah could have written “Sara’s lifetime was one hundred and twenty seven years.” Rashi tells us that the repetition of the word “years” is to convey that each phase in Sara’s life was equal. When she was one hundred, she was as if she was still twenty; meaning, when she was one hundred she still had all the advantages of youth. And even when she was twenty, she had the wisdom of an elderly person.

When It’s a Wrench To be a Mentch

“And Avraham prostrated himself before the members of the council…” (23:12)

The way a person behaves when he’s sitting alone in front of his TV is not the way he behaves when he’s receiving an Academy Award in front of 200 million people or when he is bowing to royalty or shaking hands with the President. How much of the time do we really visualize that we are in the presence... of G-d? How often do we think “G-d is watching me now. He knows exactly what I’m thinking. He sees everything I am doing.” I don’t know how many people do that too often.

Avraham faced ten tests. Most commentators explain that his final and greatest test was the akeida — G-d’s command to bring Avraham’s son Yitzchak as a sacrifice. However, Rabbeinu Yona (Avos 5:3) explains that Avraham’s tenth test was finding a grave for his wife Sara.

Why was this such a test for Avraham? Why was this the pinnacle of G-d’s testing Avraham’s mettle? How did finding a grave for Sara prove that he was worthy to be the progenitor of G-d’s representatives in this earthly realm?

Imagine a used-car salesman. With a smile right out of a toothpaste ad which can blind at ten paces, he’ll tell you that the jalopy he’s leaning on will run for another 50,000 miles at least. When he moves his arm, the car sags like an exhausted mule.

Avraham thought he was the legitimate heir to Eretz Yisrael. He assumed that he could bury his beloved wife wherever he chose. However, he has to enter into a haggling match with Efron which made buying a used car look like dealing with a Rolls-Royce salesman.

Add the emotional upheaval of the akeida, followed directly by the news of Sara’s death, and one could forgive Avraham for treating Efron, the world’s prototypical used-car salesman, with the disdain he deserved. But is that how Avraham treated him?

“And Avraham prostrated himself...” Avraham treated Efron like the most honorable of people. He didn’t say “I had a bad day! My wife just died! I’m stressed out.”

Avraham remembered that Efron, a human being, deserved to be treated like the Image of G-d that he was. Avraham didn’t react to Efron according to Efron’s level. He behaved as a Jew should. If Avraham had a hard day, why should Efron suffer?

Sometimes the little pebbles in life’s path trip us up more easily than its giant boulders. A person who understands life is no more that a giant test will recognize a large test. But how about someone pushing in line in front of us? Will we react with the knowledge that we are G-d’s ambassadors to the world? Will we feel that He is watching us, expecting us to bring honor to His name and to the people who bear His name? Sometimes the little annoyances of life are more of a test that the cataclysmic events.

A Jew must be a mentch even when treated in a most unmentchlich way. That’s the hallmark of a person who knows that he is standing in the presence of the King.

Because we have a hard day at the office, it doesn’t mean that we can take it out on our children or our spouse. This can take enormous self-control. It takes a person who has total mastery over himself to always treat every human being, Jew or non-Jew, with dignity.

Avraham’s tenth test was really two tests in one. He was under the greatest stress and he was confronted with a person who was somewhat less than a prince. Nevertheless, he accorded him honor. This, the ultimate test, showed that Avraham was fit to be the father of the Jewish People — G-d’s ambassadors.
Haftorah: Melachim I 1:1 - 31

The need to secure the succession of the Jewish People, which is the subject of this week’s Parsha, is reflected in the Haftorah: King David is coming to the end of his days (like Avraham) and his senior son, the handsome and indulged Adonijah tries to wrest the succession from Shlomo, King David’s appointed heir. But King David is alerted to Adonijah’s scheme by his wife Bas-sheva and Nassan the Prophet, and the plot is foiled.

The Will To Divide

The Chafetz Chaim once wrote to a rich man that he was obliged to make a clear will dividing his property between his sons, for, as we find in this week’s Haftorah, if the prophet Nassan admonished King David to leave clear instructions regarding his succession, certainly this rich man was obliged to do so. We do not find that David was annoyed at Nassan for reminding him of his mortality; rather he took steps to rectify a difficult situation. As the Chafetz Chaim wrote: “Children are known to disobey their parents and quarrel amongst themselves even during their parents’ lifetime — how much more after their death!”

HEBRON

“Sara died in Kiryat Arba, which is Hebron, in the Land of Canaan.” (Bereishis 23:2)

Kiryat Arba (Town of the Four) is so called because of the four couples buried there: Adam and Chava, Avraham and Sara, Yitchak and Rivka, Yaakov and Leah.” (Midrash Rabba)

Ancient Hebron was not only linked to the Patriarchs and Matriarchs but is also mentioned in regard to the mission of the spies sent by Moshe to scout the land, one of whom — Kalev ben Yefuneh — was awarded this part of the land for his faithful report. It was also the seat of King David’s reign for seven and a half years before making Jerusalem his capital.

Hebron is today under Palestinian rule, but there is a Jewish settlement in the city and in adjoining Kiryat Arba. The Machpela Cave where the Patriarchs and Matriarchs are buried continues to attract Jewish worshippers and visitors from all over the world.
